

The syllabus for HIST 3367 American Indian History is not yet completed. I have posted this overview to give you a feel for the course.

Course overview: We will be looking at the history of North American (modern Canada, the United States and Mexico) Indians from pre-history to late 20th century, with particular focus on the period of initial European contact and the colonial period. I like to use primary sources, film, and active/team based learning in class, in addition to traditional lectures. We will be watching several films in this course and comparing the onscreen portrayals to the documentary/historical evidence.

I place greater emphasis on projects/writing assignments for the overall semester grade than on tests. This course will have a choice of assignments (I use a “cafeteria system”).

Please email me if you have further questions.
